

Diana Marrero designs and leads strategic partnerships and initiatives - spanning events, podcasts, research and more - that engage and inform leaders around the world. At Foreign Policy, she leads a high-performing team of partnerships executives who develop global, high-profile programs in collaboration with partners in government, the private sector and civil society. Often capitalizing on key global convenings, the team helps partners create opportunities for thought leadership at WEF, COP, UNGA, the World Bank Meetings and more. Initiatives span across a variety of sectors, including tech, finance, health, energy, climate, sustainable development, defense and national security. Among other projects, she also leads Foreign Policy's Her Power initiative, aimed at amplifying women's voices in foreign policy and global affairs. These types of partnerships not only shed light on important, global issues, but also are a key driver of exponential revenue growth for Foreign Policy.

Prior to joining FP, Diana launched and directed The Hill Latino, serving in a business capacity to drive revenue and buzz for a new media brand focused on Latino public affairs at the established national media company, The Hill. Adept at conceptualizing and executing newsworthy initiatives and multi-channel promotional campaigns, Diana enjoys leading and collaborating with cross-functional teams to bring ideas to life.

Before shifting to the business side of media, Diana was an award-winning journalist, beginning her career at The Miami Herald and later serving as the Acting Washington Bureau Chief for the Milwaukee Journal Sentinel. Her work has appeared in The Washington Post, USA Today, and The Arizona Republic, among other publications. She is the founder and past president of the National Association of Hispanic Journalists-DC.

A graduate of the MBA program at Georgetown University, Diana concentrated in marketing, strategy and international business. She also successfully completed the International Business Diplomacy honors program at Georgetown's School of Foreign Service.

Fluent in Spanish, she is an avid traveler, with experience throughout Europe, Latin America, Africa and China.
